IMPARTIAL, NOT NEUTRAL.

SHANGHAI, SATURDAY, 11 JULY, 1863.

As we go to press, the arrival of the Pekin with the English Mail of 26th May, is reported.

THE intense quiet which prevails in and around Shanghai, causes us to look to Japan as alone likely to be the scene of events possessing political importance. As far as we can see the position of affairs is little, if at all, altered by the payment of the £110,000 demanded. There still remains the necessity for "an ample and formal apology for the offense of permitting a murderous attack on British subjects passing on a road open by treaty to them." That Colonel Neale will insist on this apology being rendered we have no doubt—indeed the mere receipt of a sum of money, however large, should never be considered an equivalent for the death of three unoffending British Subjects. To many it may appear undignified to assign a money value to the lives of Englishmen. But the Orientals would seem to feel an attack on their pockets more than an attack directed against any other point; and the fear of having, in the event of refusal, to sustain a sanguinary war, and to pay the expences of both sides, renders them anxious to choose the lesser of two evils. Seeing that we may subject ourselves to the sarcasms of our neighbours and opponents, by accepting any pecuniary recompense, it is doubly necessary that an apology of the very amplest character should be made. As yet we are in total ignorance as to the course of action upon which Colonel Neale has resolved, but we understand that he has announced his intention of pursuing the remaining portion of his instructions "with the same fixed determination as heretofore."

In the next place a heavy balance lies against Satsuma. "The immediate trial and capital execution in the presence of one or more of Her Majesty's Naval Officers, of the chief perpetrators of the murder of Mr. Richardson, and of the murderous assault on the lady and gentlemen who accompanied him—the payment of £25,000 sterling, to be distributed to the relatives of the murdered man and to those who escaped on that occasion"—such are the Demands made on Satsuma, but as yet there is no symptom either of a voluntary compliance with those demands, or of a pressure exerted by the Japanese government over its refractory subject. Towards the close of the late negociations the government of Japan showed so plainly its hostility to Foreigners, and its unwillingness to do an act of the simplest justice, that it is now no longer possible to delude ourselves with the idea that the Central government is friendly, and some disaffected Daimios alone hostile. Under such circumstances the question fairly arises whether we should not be justified in compelling the Japanese government to comply with all our demands. So long as the Government protested its innocence of all intention of offending us—so long as it whined out complaints of Satsuma's unruliness, we were bound to give it credit for the friendship it professed. We were, indeed, ready to offer the Japanese our aid in subduing their impracticable subject. But now that we have proved that the same hostile spirit prevails in the breasts of the nominal rulers of the country, we should, we imagine, be fully justified in making the government accountable for Satsuma's offense. Certainly the first portion of the demand made on Satsuma, viz. the execution of the culprits, could not then be enforced. Nevertheless it is absolutely certain that in no case would the real perpetrators of the act be delivered up to justice. Criminals accused of some other offense would be substituted for the real offenders, and the Native Authorities would enjoy the satisfaction of having egregiously cheated us. The execution of the criminals is, therefore, a concession for which we cannot reasonably hope. It would be as wise, then, to compel the Government to obtain for us the second and most essential portion of our demands. If an apology be not tendered, or be positively refused by the Mikado Government, war would appear to be as inevitable as it was before the payment of the indemnity. Should Satsuma refuse our claim upon him, he must be compelled to acknowledge it. Hence we should have two Seats of war, and two enemies, necessitating either a divided action or consecutive campaigns.

We throw out these suggestions bearing on the altered state of our relations with the Central Government, whose tardiness in performing its own obligations leads us to suspect that from the first its sympathies were far more on Satsuma's side than on ours.

The entire course of procedure followed out for the last few months by the Japanese Government has been in direct contravention of the Treaty. The cities of Noo-e-gata and Yedo which (Article III) were to have been opened on the first of January 1862, and the ports of Hiogo and Osaco which were to have been free to foreigners on the 1st January 1863, are still closed. The coinage question (Article X) has never been satisfactorily settled. For that, however, the Japanese are excusable. The assassinations perpetrated by Government employés are remarkably inconsistent with the "perpetual peace and friendship which was to prevail between Her Majesty the Queen, her heirs and successors, and His Majesty the Tycoon of Japan, and between their respective dominions and subjects." But more flagrant than any other breach—more incompatible with the entire spirit of our professed relations, is the recent demand that all Foreigners shall leave Japan. This is simply a repudiation of the entire Treaty, and an announcement of the determination of the Japanese Government to return to the old days of exclusiveness. We are unaware of any good grounds on which the Japanese can base their repudiation. Of course we assume that what we have been accustomed to call the Treaty with Japan is really, bonâ fide, such. The only pretext upon which repudiation could be excusable would be that the makers of the Treaty acted without the authority of the only power competent to enter into Foreign relations. With Western nations, at least, it is a fundamental maxim that before a Treaty can be made, it must be discovered "where resides the authority that is capable of contracting with validity in the name of the state."*

Moreover the same authority informs us that such knowledge can only be obtained "from the fundamental laws of each state." There would, therefore, be nothing extraordinary in our discovering our Treaty to be so much waste paper, in consequence of its having been made with one not "capable of contracting with validity." The Japanese, however, do not base their demand for the evacuation of their Ports, on any such grounds. The decree that all Foreigners must depart within thirty days, is an arbitrary order, most probably intended as an act of reprisal for the degradation which we have already inflicted upon them, and which they must know we intend to follow up. Assuming, as we have done, that in the case of the Japanese treaty there was sufficient power vested in the contracting parties by the states they respectively represented, the only doubts that could be cast on the validity of the Treaty would arise from incompatability of its terms with those of some other previously existing—injury to the state being involved in it—religious principles involved—or the discovery that the treaty was originally made with a dishonest purpose, or was now being prostituted to such a purpose. Other reasons may suggest themselves, but those which we have given will include most of the just or apparently just pretexts upon which a Treaty may be rendered void. It is unnecessary to go minutely into the discussion of each of these possible cases. It is easy to see that an objection founded on the difference between the Religions obtaining in Japan and in England, would not hold for a moment. "The law of nature alone regulates the treaties of Nations: the difference of religion is a thing absolutely foreign to them. Different people treat with each other in quality of men, and not under the character of Christians or of Mahommedans." † The other suppositions are easily disposed of. No treaty with any other nation was annulled or infringed upon by the English treaty, a vast increase of revenue was poured into the State Coffers, and, to quote the words of Her Majesty's Minister, "the subjects of no nation with which Japan is in relation, have given less cause for ill will on the part of the Japanese authorities than the authorities and subjects of the great British nation, which the Japanese Government, regardless of its duty to the interest of the Tycoon and his dynasty, has so easily been persuaded to treat with distrust and disregard."

To sum up. Neither morally nor politically can the Japanese be justified in repudiating the Treaty. By so doing the Government voluntarily renders itself amenable to the punishment which otherwise would exclusively have fallen upon an uncontrollable subject. Moreover it thus stamps itself as unworthy at any future time, to share the confidence of the mighty races of the West, or to take its place in the family of nations.

WE were prevented by lack of space from commenting in our last issue on the terms of the Agreement which the U. S. A. Consul has concluded with the Taotai of Shanghai, relative to the boundaries of the American Settlement, and the authority which Foreigners shall exercise in it. The first clause merely decides those boundaries; but the second, by recognizing the principle that citizens of every foreign nation have an equal right to hold land in the settlement, entirely dissipates any impression that the spots marked out by the Chinese as limits within which foreigners may acquire property and build houses, partakes of the nature of a "concession," within which members of the nation whose name a particular plot of ground bears, possess exclusive rights. The following clause at once sets at rest all disputes as to the right of the Chinese authorities to govern their own subjects. By it "the right of the Chinese to jurisdiction over their own subjects residing within the settlement, is acknowledged to be indefensable;" but to maintain the dignity of the Municipal Council, a provision is made that no arrests shall be made unless their signature is attached to the Warrant; while on the other hand, the right is reserved to the Council of arresting Chinese subjects whenever it deems it necessary.

The provision that the "subjects of non-treaty powers shall be liable to be dealt with, in all things, by the Municipal Authority" is important. Hitherto, we believe, two subjects of non-treaty powers assaulting each other, or otherwise falling under the ban of the law, have been sent to the Taotai for disposal; whereas a subject of a non-treaty power becoming involved with the subject of one which has a Consular representative, has been tried by that Consular representative and handed over to the Taotai in order that the sentence passed on him may be carried into effect. If it is to be understood by this agreement that all power, both of judging and punishing foreigners who may commit themselves within the limit of the American settlement is to be taken from the hands of the Chinese, the innovation is a most beneficial one. The final clause admits the right of the local authorities to tax Chinese residents within the boundaries of the settlement on the same terms as those recently agreed on between the English and Chinese, and to which the signatures of the Russian and Prusssian Consuls are also attached, in token of approval. These terms are well known, the levy of a tax of 20 per cent. on their rent, from Chinese occupants of houses; half to be retained for the Council, and half to be handed over to the Taotai; the relinquishment by the Taotai in virtue of this concession, of all right to further taxation, and a mutual understanding that the tax on rentals shall not only not be increased, but abandoned as soon as peace is restored. The wording of this last provision, like that of one or two others, is vague, considering the evasive disposition of those against whose encroachments, its validity will have to be maintained. We, as foreigners, of course understand that the cessation of the ten per cent now paid to the Tao-tai is implied; but on the restoration of peace, the Chinese are exceedingly likely to insist that the surrender of the entire 20 per cent was intended; and to decline to give up their ten per cent so long as we retain ours—well knowing that the tax is a necessity to the Municipality. Again, where is peace to be restored? — within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Taotai Hwang; because if so that object is nearly attained;—or within the limits of the province, or when the Taeping rebellion is completely crushed;—or when the whole of China is at peace? That there will be no backwardness in availing of any opportunity that may offer for evading the surrender of any revenue which has once fallen within their grasp, the iniquitous proceedings exposed in the letter by H. S. T., which we published in our daily issue of the 9th inst., is a proof, if previous experience be not a sufficient one. The terms of the agreement were subscribed by the Consuls of both nations respectively; therefore, when we express a hope that these extortions will not be permitted to rest unchecked, our remark applies equally to the English as to the American settlement. An increase to an existing tax is clearly "an additional tax," and, as such, is contrary both to the spirit and letter of the agreement. The increase made by the Taotai to the tax which he had been previously levying on piece goods is, therefore, one which the Foreign representatives have his own signature as authority openly and determinedly to resist. Every sacrifice has been made to avoid direct collision with the Chinese authorities; and it is now time that a determined stand should be made. They have carried every point they wished—the recognition of their rights of jurisdiction and taxation over Chinese subjects in foreign settlements, which was so scouted before Sir Frederick Bruce's dispatch was received, and the recognition of which in that dispatch excited such vehement discussion; a tacit recognition of their right to maintain existing taxes; while, although unrecognized, the presence of a Chinese tax office within the precints of a foreign settlement, and of Chinese tax collectors at the very doors of foreign hongs, is ignored. By constant dropping of water the hardest stone may be worn away; so, by constant perseverance, the more pliable Chinese succeed in wearing away the opposition offered by the stronger intellect of the European.

A VOICE FROM SOOCHOW.

I have long been unable to hold a pen, or, consequently, to give you any information regarding the recent doings of the followers of Tien-wang. Our day of triumph has passed, and my voice must be one of lamentation. Treachery has been in our camp, and the heart of the Tien wang has been made sad through the short-comings of his children. Tai-tsan has fallen through the treachery of those to whom its defence was entrusted, and Quinsan succumbed to the machinations of Foreigners. The noble Choy-Chung to whom the defence of the city had been entrusted, was true to his allegiance; but those under him listened to the voice of the tempter, and agreed to sell the gate of the city for money. But Choy-Chung discovered their evil counsels, and sent word of their design to the ruler of Soochow. Two thousand men were despatched by him in haste to overawe the disaffected by their presence, and give to the slaves of the Tartar the reception which their treachery deserved. Barely did they arrive in time to prevent the surrender of the city; the base betrayers of their trust had agreed to deliver it up on the morning following their arrival. But the presence of 2,000 of Chung-wang's chosen followers inspired them with fear, and they consented to double their treachery by deceiving those from whom they had received the price of deceit. The Imperialist Quan-foo advanced in proud confidence to the gate, expecting to see it open to admit himself and his followers; when the followers of Chung-wang burst on him like a thunderbolt, scattered his followers to the four winds of heaven, took 500 captives, and nearly destroyed the leader himself. But in this, as in other cases where the inheritors of Great Peace have succeeded in overthowing the arms or the treachery of the Tartar, the foreigners immediately accorded the latter their assistance, and through the disaffection of the garrison succeeded in wresting the city from the hands of Tien-wang. Basely did those to whom the defence of the city had been entrusted betray their trust in the hour of trial. Treble was their treachery, and trebly shall it be avenged. They sold themselves to the Tartar; they returned to their allegiance, through fear of the followers of Chung-wang; and again deserted the latter when the hour of peril arrived. The two thousand chosen men from Soochow alone conducted the defence, and alone inflicted all the loss that was experienced by the assailants. But they could not prevail against the arms and devices of their foreign-led adversaries, and Tai-tsan was taken—Choy-chung dying like a brave man in the breach he was unable longer to defend.

Quinsan too has fallen before the accursed foreigner. The black haired sons of Han have not been accustomed to fight on every side at once. It is their custom, as it was that of their ancestors, to meet their enemies boldly in the face; but it is worthy of the slaves of the Tartar to attack from behind. They have been accustomed moreover to fight with men, and not with devilish monsters, such as he who lent his aid to his impish children during the recent battles. The cry of "Sa" has been the sound to which our adherents have advanced to victory, and victory attended their efforts so long as human voices alone replied to them. But to a screaming monster, emitting fire from his belly and carrying a number of armed imps on his back, they could oppose no resistance. They knew it, and they fled; and Quinsan, too, was taken.

Great has been the lamentation in the halls of Tien-wang, at the misfortunes of his children, and mightily has he humbled himself to bring back the favour of Tien-fu to their arms. I enclose you a proclamation issued by him the day after news of the latter misfortune arrived. I have not time to translate it, but doubt not that you will readily do so.

PROCLAMATION BY TIENWANG.

Translation.

"Ichabod, Ichabod, the glory has departed from my house; the countenance of heaven has been hidden from us in anger; and the devils from hell let loose to aid our enemies in their efforts for our overthrow.

Now this must be owing to wickedness on the part of our followers; and neglect to follow the principles of conduct which we have ordained.

In the inmost recesses of my palace I have prayed for the success of my children; but it was of no avail.

The spirit of truth is departing from us; the religion of the Father of heaven has been neglected, and defeat and disaster have been the consequence.

You have been told to bring all your property to the common fund, but you have reserved it for yourselves. You have been told to spare the conquered, and to refrain from using extortion towards the people of the cities you conquer. You have disobeyed, and you see the result.

Repent, before greater disaster befalls you, and fight bravely against your foes and their devilish allies. Neither the yells of the hellish monster which is assisting them, nor the fire that burns eternally in his belly can aid them, if you give not way to the influence of the fear he inspires. The imps alone whom he carries can hurt you, and the guns which he carries for them.

Be valiant therefore, O my children; attend to my precepts; fear not the devices of Satan, but fight bravely to secure that Great Peace which shall assuredly crown your efforts."

But our hearts are failing us, now that we have to fight against devils as well as men; and there are many who say that the day of our good chance is departed. By the aid of the monster who accompanies them in all their undertakings, the imps, traverse the country in every direction. The garrison of Soochow are trembling under shelter of their walls, and fear that even the power of Chung-wang is tottering to its fall. We can fight against men, but not against devils.

JAPAN.

The following Despatch, dated April 6th 1863, and addressed by Colonel Neale to the Japanese Foreign Ministers was for the first time published in full in the Japan Herald Extra of June 27th. As the most important document which has yet been published on Japanese Affairs, we reproduce it, and commend it to the careful perusal of our readers.

To Their Excellencies
Midzono Idzowino Kami,
Itakoora Soowono Kami,
Japanese Ministers for Foreign Affairs.
From Lieut-nant-Colonel
Edw. St John Neale,
Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, &c., &c.,
Her Britannic Majesty's Legation,
Yokohama, April 6th, 1863.

The Undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, has received the explicit instructions of his Government to demand reparation from the Japanese Government for the murder and outrage committed upon British subjects on the 14th of September last, on the Tokaido near Kanagawa, by the Retainers of the Daimio Prince of Satsuma.

The circumstances attending this unprovoked and savage assault as related by the survivors, and as set forth by the Undersigned in his several communications written and verbal, with the Japanese Ministers, have never been controverted, attempted to be palliated, or denied.

The sentiments of indignation with which Her Majesty's Government have learnt the particulars of this outrage, are expressed in the following words addressed to the Undersigned by Her Britannic Majesty's Minister of Foreign Affairs.

"The barbarous murder of Mr. Richardson, and the murderous assault on two Gentlemen and a Lady who were in his company, have inspired Her Majesty's Government with great and just indignation. It was to be hoped that the instant trial and condign punishment of the murderers together with an offer of further reparation, would have shown on the part of the Japanese Government a due sense of the magnitude of the offence which had been committed; but the letter of the Japanese Ministers of Foreign affairs, dated the 16th of September dispels this hope. In a tone of helplessness or evasion they say, that in the answer that Abooro gave to their officer there is something very improper, and that they will have the whole state of the case enquired into and inform you of the result

"There could have been no doubt in the minds of the Ministers of Japan, that a barbarous murder had been committed; no doubt that other murders had at the same time been attempted, and the only course which a Government sensible of its duties, and able to perform them, could have pursued, was to arrest, try, convict, and execute the murderers; but even the first step in this process does not seem to have been taken."

Such are the observations of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, which after mature consideration of the anomalous political rule which prevails in Japan, has instructed the Undersigned to make to the Japanese Government through Your Excellencies, a peremptory demand for immediate and full redress for the violence and outrage committed.

The reparation which the Undersigned is instructed to demand for this fresh outrage will be specifically set forth at the close of the Note.

In the meanwhile, under instructions from his Government, the Undersigned made verbally and in writing a formal demand so far back as the 4th of December 1862 on the Japanese Ministers for redress and compensation for the previous outrage on Her Britannic Majesty's Legation on the 28th of June last, and which consisted in the payment of Ten Thousand Pounds Sterling (£10,000) for the benefit of the families of the two British Guards murdered on that occasion at the very bed-room door of the Undersigned, Her Majesty's Charge d'Affaires.

Nine months have now elapsed since the perpetration of that deed, and four months since the demand for compensation was communicated by the Undersigned to the Japanese Ministers; but it has been evaded, and the outrage remains still unrequited.

It is now again peremptorily demanded.

These two flagrant acts, injurious to the dignity of the British Flag, and accompanied with all the sensation and horror which they occasioned among civilized nations, have nevertheless called forth no serious offer of redress in any degree proportionate to the enormity of the crimes committed, which moreover, carried with them, in a national point of view, an insult and indignity which the Japanese Government well knows Her Majesty's Government would not suffer to remain without atonement.

Whatever may be the real situation of the Government of the Tycoon, in respect to its power of punishing the acts of hostile Daimios and their retainers, the Tycoon's Ministers, under the circumstances referred to, have betrayed a culpable apathy, disregard, and indifference in their communications with the Undersigned regarding those outrages, for which the Tycoon's Government is now most justly called upon to afford ample reparation.

Procrastination and evasion, attained by lengthened arguments as to unimportant details, attempted negotiations as to the amount to be awarded as compensation, and more recently an absolute silence on the part of the Japanese Government in respect to both these unrequited grievances, has been the course pursued by Your Excellencies, regardless of the friendly warnings and remonstrances of the Undersigned while, moreover, acting under evil councils, the Japanese Government has adopted a passive, reserved, and unfriendly policy in its relations with the British Representative, not only in regard to those outrages, but in all matters of interest to British Subjects.

This unjustifiable course of action has been crowned with the destruction by Political incendiarism of the new British Legation Residence at Gotenyama.

On the other hand the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, viewing with indulgence the obstacles and obstructions opposed to the full development of British commercial enterprise by the Japanese Government, and judging them to emanate from the great political embarrassments of the country, was the first to concede to the wishes of His Majesty the Tycoon, conveyed through his Envoy, and to consent conditionally to the postponement of the opening of Osaca and other Ports, subsequently assented to by other European Treaty Powers, and to be assented to by the Government of the United States only in consideration of counter concessions which the Government of Great Britain has not sought to exact.

The Tycoon's Envoys have returned and rendered an account of their mission to the Japanese Government in relation to the foregoing negociations, and the Undersigned has just communicated to his Government the thanks lately expressed to him in writing by Your Excellencies on behalf of the Tycoon and Government of Japan for the attentions and cordial receptions bestowed upon those Envoys by the Sovereign, Government, and People of Great Britain; a record standing in painful contrast with the unfriendly demeanor of the Japanese Ministers towards the Representative and Subjects of Her Majesty in this country.

The Undersigned nevertheless unhesitatingly proclaims and challenges the Japanese Government to disprove the fact, that the subjects of no nation with which Great Britain is in relation, have given less cause for ill will on the part of the Japanese authorities than the authorities and subjects of the great British Nation which the Japanese Government, regardless of its duty to the interest of the Tycoon and his dynasty, has so easily been persuaded to treat with distrust and disregard.

By a happy and rare good fortune which could not reasonably have been expected, during the period that British subjects of all classes have resided in Japan, and thousands of British sailors have frequented its open Ports, no noticeable instance of violence towards Japanese has been complained of regarding one of them, and yet in numbers they greatly exceed all other Foreign residents in Japan.

Such has been the anxious care of the British Authorities to engage their countrymen to adopt the conduct of friendship and conciliation, and to accommodate themselves to the difficult situation of the Government of this country.

While the good sense and forbearance of the British residents has ensured these unprecedented and happy results, those same British subjects do not and cannot forget that few nations of the world are as powerful, and none more determined than their own to demand and to obtain reparation for unprovoked outrages committed on its subjects.

The Undersigned is bound to add that four years of intercourse between the subjects of Great Britain and Japan has proved that the Japanese people are friendly and well disposed, having no cause arising out of habits or prejudices to entertain hostile or fanatical feelings towards Foreigners The Authorities and official class of this nation, from the Ministers and Daimios to the Yakonins, have shown evidences of reputable jealousy and distrust towards Foreigners, which threatens to endanger the interests and tranquility of the peaceful inhabitants of this country.

Notwithstanding the amicable and conciliatory disposition of the British Government, and the responsible conduct of the British Representative in Japan, in their relations with the Tycoon's Government, emanating from a sincere desire to avert, in the interests of peace and commerce, all cause of absolute dissension, the Japanese Government would on its part appear under evil advice to have resolved to try the risk of withholding reparation for absolute outrages, and to brave the inevitable consequences of its unfriendly and distrustful demeanour towards the British Government and nation.

In explanation of this uncalled for and ill-advised conduct, the undersigned is willing to hope that the Tycoon and Government of Japan are not as yet aware of the power and determination of Great Britain to enforce reparation for unprovoked grievances even in this distant and extreme region of the world.

The Undersigned in now approaching the specific reparation which is required from the Japanese Government, and which will not be deviated from, modified or discussed, desires solemnly and earnestly to explain and impress upon Your Excellencies as responsible servants of the Tycoon, for the information of His Majesty and the Supreme Council of this Empire, that there is a serious difference between open hostilities, or in other words War as declared between Nations, and the adoption of such coercive measures of coercion as are necessary to ensure acquiescence to moderate demands should they be indirectly resisted or attempted to be evaded.

No loss or ruin to Japan is involved by the preliminary measures which are at present contemplated to awaken the Japanese Government to a due sense of its responsibilities should it refuse or evade to comply with the reparation now peremptorily demanded, but a persistence in such refusal must necessarily lead to a very different and disastrous situation of affairs.

The reparation now demanded for the murders and murderous assaults committed upon British subjects, has been affixed by Her Majesty's Government with a consideration regard for the difficult situation of the Japanese Government, and its political embarrassments

But the penalty imposed and the measure of compensation demanded for the sufferers and their families now computed in thousands, will if the Japanese Government continue to be ill-advised, inevitably expand into millions, to indemnify the cost of armaments which must be employed by Great Britain should all serious warnings fail to ensure the redress imperatively demanded for these unprovoked and flagrant outrages.

Notwithstanding the evil designs of interested councillors, the intelligent Ministers of the Tycoon are already aware that the sincere desire of Great Britain is to preserve peaceful relations of friendship and commerce with Japan; but it is of vital interest to Japan that the Tycoon's Government should be guided in its council by the knowledge that Great Britain will not tolerate even a passive defiance of its power, or refusal of its just demands.

If, however, the Ministers of the Tycoon now in office, setting aside all considerations of ordinary prudence, and deceiving themselves alone by devices calculated to gain time, cause Japan to drift into hostilities with a great Power with which it is utterly unable to cope, then those Ministers will fall the heavy responsibility of all the calamities which may ensue

Having thus discharged his duty and conscience by the earnest remarks which precede, the Undersigned has the honor to state to your Excellencies that he is instructed to make the following explicit and peremptory demands upon the Japanese Government.

First. An ample and formal apology for the offence of permitting a murderous attack on British Subjects passing on a road open by Treaty to them.

Secondly. The payment of One Hundred Thousand Pounds (£100,000) as a penalty on Japan for this offence.

The mode, manner, and form of the apology, will be regulated in conference between the Undersigned and Commissioners appointed by the Japanese Government, as well as the mode and manner of payment of the money reparation demanded.

Twenty days from this date is assigned to the Japanese Government for its reply, which must be of a categorical character, either consenting to, or refusing, the demands here made.

At the expiration of the twenty days assigned for the reply of the Japanese Government, should that reply either be a rejection or evasion, or otherwise than a positive acceptance of the reparation demanded, the British Admiral now arrived here with a considerable force will, within 24 hours after the receipt of such refusal of these demands, or in the event of no reply whatever being received at the expiration of that period from the Japanese Government, proceed to enter upon such measures as may be necessary to secure the reparation demanded.

The conduct of these measures will henceforth necessarily be in the hands of the Admiral Commanding in Chief Her Majesty's Naval Forces

The Undersigned for his own part is bound to remind the Japanese Ministers that upon the occurrence of the outrage of the 14th of September, in his extreme desire to leave to the Japanese Government the legitimate mode of affording redress, he exercised a discretion, since entirely approved of by Her Majesty's Government, but which obliged him at the time to bear the burden of much obloquy on the part of the Foreign Residents of Yokohama.

The undersigned may even now apprise the Japanese Government that, so strong is his desire, while carrying out the full tenor of his instructions, to avoid the infliction of loss or suffering upon the unoffending inhabitants of Japan, that he will so express his views to the Admiral; but resistance to or attempted evasion of the operations of coercion which may become necessary will evidently render all such considerations impracticable.

It becomes therefore the imperative duty of the Undersigned, earnestly to warn the Japanese Ministers that the slightest molestation, injury, or violence, attempted to be offered by Japanese Authorities, the adherents of Daimios, or others, to the persons or property of British subjects at the Ports open to Foreigners during the continuance of these preliminary measures, should they be rendered necessary, will alter the whole nature of the operations, and result in the immediate exercise of serious hostilities, the extent, duration, and consequences of which cannot be foreseen; but their whole weight and responsibility will rest with the Japanese Government and its advisers. The present demands of the British Government are sufficiently defined and explicit, as are also the first consequences of a refusal to accede to them.

The Undersigned, having acquitted himself of his duties in distinctly stating and explaining to the Tycoon's Government what is peremptorily required at its hands, and the penalties which must inevitably attend a non-compliance with the same, proceeds to acquaint Your Excellencies with the further measures which, under instruction from Her Majesty's Government, will be adopted to enforce a far more important portion of the reparation rendered necessary, and required for the barbarous murder of the 14th of September from the Prince of Satsuma, by whose adherents that deed was perpetrated.

The Japanese Ministers have written and have stated to the undersigned on various occasions, and have openly avowed to the Ministers of other Foreign States, that the Japanese Government could not pursue or arrest malefactors within the domains of the Daimio Prince Satsuma. This is no reason why the adherents of this Prince, who were the actual murderers, should escape condign punishment, and the British Government, taking into mature consideration the difficulties which thus obstruct the Tycoon's Government, is itself constrained to demand satisfaction and redress from the Prince of Satsuma.

A Naval Force will therefore be directed to proceed to a port appertaining to the Prince of Satsuma, where it will be demanded of him:—

First. The immediate trial and capital execution in the presence of one or more of Her Majesty's Naval officers of the chief perpetrators of the murder of Mr. Richardson, and of the murderous assault upon the lady and gentlemen who accompanied him.

Secondly.—The payment of Twenty-five Thousand Pounds (£25,000) sterling, to be distributed to the relatives of the murdered man, and to those who escaped the swords of the assassins on that occasion.

In the event of the refusal, delay, or evasion of the Prince of Satsuma to carry these demands into immediate effect, such measures of coercion will immediately be adopted against him as the Admiral may judge best calculate to obtain the reparation demanded.

The Undersigned, out of courtesy and high consideration for the Tycoon's Government, makes to it the above communication regarding the course to be adopted with the Prince of Satsuma considering also that the Government of the Tycoon may deem it expedient in the interests of Japan, to advise the Prince of Satsuma to comply at once with the demands of the British Government, necessitated by the barbarous outrages committed upon unoffending British subjects by his retainers, at the head of whom was his father Shimadzo Saboora. With this object a high officer might be despatched by the Japanese Government charged with acquainting the consequences of any obstinate or ill-advised conduct on the part of that Prince, in ignorance of the power and determination of the British Nation to enforce redress for unprovoked injuries.

The undersigned avails himself of this occasion again to renew to Your Excellencies the assurance of his high consideration.

(Signed) E. St JOHN NEALE.

NAGASAKI.

Minutes of a Meeting of British Residents held at the House of Messrs. Glover & Co.,—Mr. E. Harrison Secretary.

June 30th, 1863.

Present:—Geo. S. Morrison, Esq., H.B.M's Consul, W. J. Alt, H. E. Mears, J. Maltby, J. L. Glover, E. Harrison, R. Holme, J. Mitchell, E. T. Kettle, Capt. J. Wright,—Comet; Capt. J. Miffett,—Manu; Capt. S. Brown,—Ariel; Capt. Jenkins,—Ashmore; Capt. Gibson, — City of Nantes; Capt. Fullerton,—Syrina.

Mr. Consul Morrison was requested to take the Chair, which he accordingly did, saying that as he had heard this meeting was in contemplation he had expressed a wish to be present, that he might assist the deliberations by any opinions or information that might be of service.

He should propose that the meeting be opened by the perusal of his Circular of this morning which afforded information of what had taken place since the meeting at the Consulate of the previous day.

The Circular annexed was then read by Mr. E. Harrison.

CIRCULAR.

To the British Community.

The Governor of Nagasaki visited Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at noon yesterday, when the former Governor announced that the communication made through the Vice Governor's the previous day (stated to the meeting yesterday morning) was well understood: however the Consul gave the substance of it again, and particularly stated his opinion that in the circumstances in which they found themselves, the members of the Community were entitled to provide for their own safety and of such Property as they could remove, by leaving the Port, leaving the rest to the care and responsibility of the Japanese Authorities, and that the Consul would acquaint the Governors with the intended departure of any individual in order that they might take means for the security of his Premises, &c. Of course the Consul cannot insure that the Japanese Government will accept, or the British Government enforce, the responsibility, but he will not fail to support his opinion on the subject to the best of his ability, feeling it to be just.

The substance of the Governor's communication was simply that he had as yet received no intelligence of a rupture, and no instructions, but that he would be bound implicitly to obey the orders which he might receive, and that as the military would doubtless receive direct instructions, he could not promise that any delay would intervene between the receipt of instructions and action upon them, and he felt it his duty to be thus explicit.

Finally the Consul repeated that in the meantime as no hostile act would be commenced on our part (though any such on the part of the Japanese would be speedily and effectually responded to) the Governor would be held responsible for the safety and peace of the community.

It was noticeable that the newly arrived Governor (who in a few days will be in sole charge of the Government here) took no part in the conversation, till at its conclusion he introduced the topic of Loonins and ungovernable soldiery. The former Governor announced his early departure for Osaka, while the nature of his communications left his successor quite free in his proceedings, at the same time that it left no ground to charge himself with bad faith.

No allusion was made to the Tycoon, but the Emperor (or Mikado) was spoken of as deciding the course of events, and that he was so mighty as not to be disobeyed for a moment.

As a further evidence of the condition of the country, it was mentioned that Okabé Suninogono Kami (formerly Governor here) was lately, en route to Osaka, attacked for imputed leaning towards foreigners, and narrowly escaped having some of his attendants killed. The Consul requested that if opportunity occurred the sympathy of this community and their regret at the occurrence might be expressed to him.

(Signed) GEO. MORRISON,
H.B.M's Consul.

Nagasaki, 30th June, 1863.

The Consul resumed his observations, saying that with regard to the condition of affairs, he had no doubt the meeting would agree that it would be undesirable to exhibit panic, or act with precipitation—there was still a chance, if but a very feeble one, that the cessation of diplomacy at Yeddo might induce the Authorities to yield compliance, and fulfil their engagements.

The Consul now resigned the Chair, to which Mr W. J. Alt was voted.

The object of the meeting was stated to be for the purpose of taking into consideration the important matter lately communicated by H. B. M's Consul, and of arriving if possible at some definite arrangement as to the course to be pursued by Residents in the unpleasant position in which they are placed.

Mr R. Holme than moved that the following letter be addressed to H. M's Consul.

The letter annexed was read by Mr E. Harrison. Mr J. Maltby seconded the motion, which was carried by a show of hands.

To G. S. Morrison, Esq.,
H. B. M's Consul.

Sir,—The position in which British Residents in this Port are placed, renders it urgently necessary that they should have some definite instructions from yourself, or the Senior Naval Officer—to give them authority either to remain, or leave the settlement.

We are obliged for your communicating to us the contents of the despatch received per "Centaur" from H. M's Chargé d'Affaires and Vice Admiral Kuper, and your intention of remaining until the Senior Naval Officer considered the danger too imminent.

We also feel that as matters stand we cannot leave until the notice aforesaid from the Senior Naval Officer is communicated to us, or until we have your official intimation that placing in your hands inventories of our property is sufficient for the recognition by Her Majesty's Government of any claim for damage or loss that may arise, during our absence. We trust that you will see the necessity and justice of our speedily receiving such intimation to direct our movements, as ere this probably hostilities have commenced at Yeddo, and we cannot tell at what moment offensive measures may be adopted by the Japanese here.

It would appear by what Captain Cressy said, and the purport of our private letters, that the "Centaur" was sent by the Vice Admiral with orders to take away the whole of the Residents, but the impossibility of our leaving at so short a notice and without any official authority for doing so is obvious.

We feel confident that neither yourself nor the Senior Naval Officer would wish to throw upon us the responsibility of leaving our property to the mercy of the Japanese with the chance of our claims being repudiated by Her Majesty's Government on the ground that we had no authority for leaving it, and we are equally sure that you would not wish us to remain with the possibility of our lives being endangered for the want of such authority.

If it be necessary we shall be obliged by your communicating the foregoing to the Senior Naval Officer.

The Consul said he would reserve any observation until the occasion of replying to it.

Mr E. Harrison then brought forward the following resolution.

That in the event of unmistakeable symptoms presenting themselves of hostile intentions on the part of the Japanese, such as the massing of Princes' soldiers in the neighborhood or the collecting of armed bands in the settlement to the jeopardy of Foreign life and property, and no positive order be issued by H. B. M.'s Consul or the senior Naval Officer for the Community to quit the Port, then, in the absence of a guard being furnished by the Naval Force, that the British Residents place their services at the disposal of H. B. M.'s Consul more especially for the personal protection of H. B. M.'s Representative, in whose course of action they place entire confidence, and to whom they feel themselves bound in the present crisis to render all the moral and physical support in their power.

Mr. J. L. Glover seconded the resolution.

The Consul withdrew so as not by his presence to interfere with the free expression of opinion.

The resolution having been duly carried and read to H. B. M's Consul,

He said that he would not ask that it should be withdrawn, though he could not consent that the members of the community should neglect themselves or incur inconvenience on his account. He was prepared to share in the utmost with each individual the dangers and anxieties of the crisis. He admitted that the resolution afforded him pleasure, for it shewed a desire that the position of the British Representative at the Port should be becomingly maintained, and he entirely coincided in their view. Apart from personal grounds, he thought that in a country like Japan, and in times like the present, H. M.'s Legations and Consulates should be protected from insult and outrage by H. M.'s forces, a result not to be insured by the mere presence of ships in harbor. He also begged to acknowledge the resolution as a mark of sympathy in his anxiety for their interest, and evidence that they were convinced he had acted for the best.

On the chairman closing the Meeting the Consul said he wished to take the opportunity of acknowledging the consideration he had always received in the conduct of affairs from the British Community, their ready cooperation when needed, and habitual compliance with his wishes. It was a matter of congratulation that since the opening of the Port, he could not recall that any disagreement had arisen.

He relied upon the Community furnishing any information that might reach them which might assist in determining our position here.

EDW. HARRISON,
Hon. Secretay.

Reply of H.B.M.'s Consul.

British Consulate,
Nagasaki, July 2nd 1863.

Gentlemen,—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of this date, the object of which appears to be to obtain an assurance that Her Majesty's Government will support your claims for indemnity in the case of your considering it prudent immediately to leave the port, or your premises on shore, also an intimation from the Senior Naval Officer or myself when it may be necessary or desirable that you should do so.

The intimation I have given under instructions from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires that lists of property will be received, sufficiently implies that just claims will be duly considered by Her Majesty's Government.

It is impossible that any more explicit intimation can be afforded. At all events, you must be aware that I have no authority to give such.

As regards authority or direct instructions for you to embark, I can only remind you that you are fully informed of the actual state of affairs, and it will be my duty to let you know anything that from time to time may come to my knowledge in any way affecting your position, and should I have reason to consider your danger so imminent as to render it advisable that you should no longer remain on shore (a conclusion which I do not think I have sufficient ground at present to arrive at) I should not hesitate to express that opinion. Even in that case, however, you cress Officer would not be in a position to give direct instructions for any contingency.

I am authorized by the Senior Naval Officer to state that he entirely concurs in the above view, and to add that should the operation of the force under his command, or the difficulty of affording protection proportioned to the occasion for it, render your embarkation necessary, you will be duly informed.

I am,
Gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) GEO. S. MORRISON.
